Protect your sensitive information

Whether it's data privacy issues such as the Data Protection Act, financial compliance with Sarbanes-Oxley, or environmental laws such as the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE), chances are that one of these affects your organisation in some way.

Your organisation's network obviously contains and/or processes protected sensitive information. Unauthorised disclosure of such sensitive information could adversely impact your organisation with both civil and criminal liabilities. To protect yourself and your company, it's vital that you implement some extra precautions.

Compliance Checks

Compliance is nothing to fool around with

It's imperative that your organisation understands its responsibilities for safeguarding protected data. Protected data is any information that someone could use to identify an individual. Information protected by legislation can include:

- Salary, fringe benefits (except for federal employees) & Terms of employment (including performance and disciplinary records)
- Criminal investigation and arrest history
- Employment history (including general or security clearance information) & Social Security information
- Personnel profile (including home address and phone number), Medical history & Identification codes

Benefits

- Client peace of mind – monitor network on 24x7x365 basis proactively
- Single point of contact for carriage and all network CPE issues & single supplier instead of multiple vendors
- SLAs for service delivery
- Known costs for management & fixed price contracts
- Avoid costs of building own management & reporting systems
- Lower TCO – reduced costs for specialised IT staff

About us

If you view IT as an investment – rather than a cost – you'll be looking for a strategic IT partner that thinks in the same way. Supporting UK and international businesses 24 x 7 x 365, The Internet Group is based in London, with co-location facilities in Birmingham and New York.
